Location: Brickell, Miami

Projected opening: December 2017

Miami's first food hall hits the Brickell City Centre development this winter, just south of downtown in the booming Brickell neighborhood that's become the city's financial center. The Italian food hall concept, spearheaded by NYC restaurateur Jacopo Giustiniani and restaurant management veteran Matthias Kiehm, will span 40,000 square feet over three stories. The first floor will be home to a market selling produce, imported meats, and cheeses, and gifts, while the second story will sport multiple restaurants and bars inspired by the various regions of Italy; the third floor will be devoted to wine and a cooking school.
